

Computers work best when things are on or off. Computers have only two numerals, zero and one.

We call numbers with only zero and one binary. The “bi” in binary means two like the two wheels on a bicycle. We call each place a bit, short for binary digit.

Binary numbers have places, just like decimal numbers, but they’re base 2 places.

Ones place:

